SMALL GROUPS MAKE GREAT DECISIONS

Great Decisions is designed for your participation. For 25 years across the nation, Great Decisions has brought people more than just the facts about international events; it also has helped them understand the decisions of U.S. foreign policy.

Small groups make great decisions through discussion. Participation in a small group discussion encourages you to think, examine issues, and share conclusions. You explore the "why" as well as the "what" of foreign policy.

It's easy to do. All you need is the Great Decisions program book and a dozen or so members for your discussion group.

The program book contains background information, references, and questions to stimulate your discussion. Interest — not expert knowledge — is all you need.

Your group can be composed of members of a club or service organization, church society, community group, friends, or simply people drawn together with a desire to learn. You can meet in homes, churches, community centers, or under the sponsorship of your local library or educational institution. You can use Great Decisions at any time, any day, or format that works for you and your group. You can supplement the program book with newspaper articles and radio or TV programs in February or March, or with invited guests such as specialists or foreign students.

At the end of your discussions, opinion ballots in the back of the program book give you a chance to tell Washington about your decisions.

All the help you need is available from Gil Gott, 220 N. 26th St., Camp Hill, PA, 761-0592.
